David Groesbeck has been practicing intellectual property law since 2008. His practice is primarily, though not exclusively, focused on obtaining patent protection for his clients' inventions and counseling them on strategies for protecting their intellectual property rights. While he has spent most of this time delivering service to his clients as outside counsel, he also has experience as an in-house attorney. His experience as an in-house attorney has helped him better understand his clients' needs and to focus on the most efficient and effective ways to satisfy those needs. David has an excellent rapport with his clients and enjoys turning new ideas into patented inventions.
